THE HIT LIST

Full Nelson

▼ Rain, snow, sleet and hail—nothing could keep country music devotees from getting to Nashville's Ryman Auditorium in early March to enjoy rare back-to-back nights of music with the legendary WILLIE NELSON. The weather couldn't have been any more adverse, with every form of precipitation falling from the winter sky, but the historic building was packed out and toasty warm as fans literally slid in to enjoy Willie and opening act RAINEY QUALLEY.

Zimmerman, who comprise the pairing, write, play and sing music that's not easily categorized, but they're equally comfortable with country, rock and blues, which all come together to create an exciting, rootsy sound. And both are first-rate guitar slingers. You've likely picked up on their song "When the Right One Comes Along" on the TV series Nashville. Now it's time to pick up their album.

ZBB + SNL = A-OK

▲ For their first Saturday Night Live appearance, ZAC BROWN BAND showed their versatility by playing jangly single "Homegrown" and then returning for the aggressive, grungy rocker "Heavy Is the Head" with Soundgarden singer Chris Cornell. It's like a dare to other country artists: just you try and see what happens.

brought guitarist BLAZE BAUM onstage at the Colorado Springs World Arena. The 21-year-old joined the country star on "Pride and Joy" and "Rocky Mountain Way" and confidently held his own.

Lucky Strike

▲ The duo STRIKING MATCHES has just released a powder keg of an album, Nothing but the Silence. Justin Davis and Sarah

Silver Screening

▲ COLE SWINDELL didn't need an exotic location for the video shoot for "Ain't Worth the Whiskey." He slipped into one of Country Weekly's Hot Spots—Silver Dollar Saloon—to get the perfect backdrop for his "I'm way over you" anthem. And props to Cole for using the breakup tune to draw attention to his real-life buddy who serves in the U.S. Special Forces.

[ LETTERS ]

Dear Readers:

I would consider GARY ALLAN the strong silent type. He doesn't speak out much, you don't see him in the news and he's not flashy with his fame. But one thing Gary does have is longevity, something that he sees as a sign of success. Gary started in the business in 1996, and while he's been overlooked by awards shows, Gary has experienced steady success with his music. The singer

sat down with CW to talk about staying power, his style of music and remaining true to himself.

In this week's NASH section, CARRIE UNDERWOOD is victorious in our NASH Music Madness competition. Carrie battled through a bracket of 16 stars on the strength of your votes to become champ. We go on set with SUNNY SWEENEY as she films her video for "My Bed," featuring WILL HOGE; Blair Garner chats with the nicest guy in country, DARIUS RUCKER; and so much more!

Don't miss next week's issue, on stands April 6, as we get friendly with one of country's bad boys, DWIGHT YOAKAM.

See you next week!

LISA KONICKI, Editor in Chief

MISSING OUT

The Legends of Country special issue was good BUT you missed many of the really greats, such as Tommy Hunter, Gordon Lightfoot, Eddy Arnold, Hank Snow, Tennessee Ernie Ford, Hank Thompson, Roy Rogers, just to name a few. I know there are more country legends that I have not mentioned. It would be great if you could compile another Legends of Country special and put it on the market.

— CHRIS GREEN
Prince Rupert, British Columbia

A GREAT SHOWMAN

Thank you for the great article on Jeff Bates [“Sittin' Twitty,” Jan. 26]. I have seen him perform several times. He always puts on a great show. I would love to see him more in Country Weekly.

BLESSED

I loved the story on Joey+Rory [“True Faith,” Jan. 26]. I too believe that [their daughter] Indiana Boon is a true gift from heaven. God does not pick just anyone to be parents—only the blessed ones.

— K. LINDEE
Glencoe, Minn.

True Faith

As the songwriters with 8 songs featured on ABC's Hit Drama Nashville, Sarah Zimmermann and Justin Davis occupy that sweet spot at the intersection of country, rock and blues, where all elements blend together to form an authentic raw and rootsy sound with a timeless appeal.

WHAT'S THAT?

ADDS

After a song has been released to radio, the real game begins. Rarely does every reporting station—the stations that have airplay recorded for country chart purposes—jump on a new single at once. The ones that don't are called by the record label's promotion teams, who ask, encourage and maybe even beg them to "add" the single. And no, those enticements do not involve money. That's called payola, and it's a federal crime. They count on their good relationships and an artist's proven history or the buzz around an up-and-comer to get the add.

THE INSIDE STORIES ON COUNTRY MUSIC'S HOTTEST STARS

BACK IN THE SADDLE

WHEN YOU ARE ON THE ROAD as much as Randy Houser, time is of the essence when it comes to the hours spent at home. That same mentality also translates into Randy's songwriting, where he knows right away when he's spending too much time on a song that won't necessarily be a good fit for him and also when a song has potential to be a hit. "I don't get to write songs every day like I used to," notes Randy. "If you're going to spend time writing a song, it almost has to be something you love."

Knowing he had his third album to complete, Randy got together with a handful of songwriters to start chipping away at ideas. One of those writers was Brice Long, who invited Randy to his office in the Berry Hill area of Nashville to see what they could come up with. After going through several concepts and having no luck, the two broke for lunch to see if stepping away from the writing room would help spark something to write upon their return. "Brice is one of those writers who is very patient with me and doesn't get offended if I shoot down a lot of ideas until we collectively come up with the right thing and the right thing to say," Randy explains.

When they finally settled back into a groove that afternoon, they began playing through different melodies and guitar riffs when the opening line of their song came out: Every time I fall I get back up again. "It reminded me of how I was traveling all the time, then trying to come back home and keep juggling all the

A LONG STRING OF HITS

In addition to being a co-writer on "Like a Cowboy," Brice Long also co-wrote Randy's debut hit, "Anything Goes," back in 2008. He is also a co-writer on Gary Allan's 2004 chart-topping single "Nothing On but the Radio."

pieces and trying to make things work," Randy says softly. "It's just hard to do. I thought about anybody who's used to being away from home. You're out living your life and trying to stay in touch with what's going on at home. Meanwhile, this whole life is going on at home that you can't be a part of. You miss them and they miss you. It's a struggle that a lot of people go through."

That feeling and emotion led Randy to reflect on another lifestyle that might have involved the same scenario. "I just had a vision of the old-school cowboy riding in and saving the day, if that makes sense," Randy says. "I don't know if it's fairy-tale-like or what, but that's where it came from and it was something we both immediately loved."

They continued to work on "Like a Cowboy" for the remainder of the day, eventually putting the finishing touches on their new song. As Randy anticipated, the song made it onto his How Country Feels album, and it was released as the project's fourth single. It followed in the path of the previous tracks by becoming yet another Top 5 hit.

FOLLOW THE TREND: Bohemian Buzz

Whether you call it bohemian, gypsy, peasant or hippie chic, the new trend in fashion is sweeping the country and country music. Think natural fibers and colors, comfortable and loose fit, feminine details of lace, flowers, delicate patterns and floaty, flowing hems and sleeves. Hair, too, should hang naturally, whether straight, wavy or curly, or be swept up with a simple headband or flowers. And makeup should enhance your own natural beauty with just a blush of color on the cheeks and lips, and a delicate sweep of mascara on the lashes. Love it? Spend a little, spend a lot, just embrace your inner hippie chick. Peace.

Pancake Party

NEWCOMER SARAH DUNN SHARES A FAMILY RECIPE FOR PANCAKES, A PERFECT ADDITION FOR YOUR CREW'S EASTER BREAKFAST.

AS SOON AS SARAH DUNN, lead vocalist for the Sarah Dunn Band, gets off the road, she can't wait to get into the kitchen. And that goes for this particular morning in Nashville, where Sarah and the band have stopped over at a friend's house after traveling all night from their Missouri home base. This is definitely one hungry crew, so Sarah takes command in the kitchen and proceeds to whip up a band favorite, her homemade pancakes.

"I always make these for the band when they come over to my house," says the bubbly singer, who also plays fiddle and mandolin. "I got the recipe from my grandmother and I have experimented with it and added to it." Her tastiest addition, she'll gladly share, is the malted milk mix. "I know it's unusual, but that gives it an awesome flavor. It has a little bit of a different texture." Sarah also loves adding blueberries or chocolate chips to the batter.

For a taste of their music, check out the Sarah Dunn Band's new single, "Bye Bye," released to radio and online outlets in March. And make sure to try Sarah's awesome pancakes, which you can whip up for your own crew on Easter Sunday, April 5.

Looks like another winning stack, judging by the satisfied grins.

1 tsp. baking powder
1/2 tsp. baking soda

Eustis, Fla.

WHY YOU SHOULD KNOW HIM:
Michael's debut single, "Kiss You in the Morning," was the second-most-added song at country radio during the third week of February, and the Florida native recently joined Sam Hunt's Lipstick Graffiti Tour.

STAGE PRESENCE

"When I was little, my family had a band called The Country Cousins and they played older country. My dad sang lead and played rhythm, my grandfather played lead guitar, my uncle played bass, my cousin played drums and a couple other cousins sang harmony. It was all family. They disbanded when I was 5 or 6, but I had been onstage with them since I was knee-high. I was up there playing my Kermit the Frog guitar that I thought was plugged in."

PRESS PLAY

"When I was 9 years old, I decided I wanted to play, so my dad and grandfather started showing me how to play guitar. It became my obsession, and I started playing with my grandfather on the weekends at community centers and American Legions. That's where I wanted to be, and I learned so much from performing at a young age, and performing classic country like Ray Price, Porter Wagoner, Bobby Bare, Earl Thomas Conley."

MUSIC CITY BOUND

"I moved to Nashville in 2010 and busted the road and began playing every hole in the wall that I could. It was the old-school way of doing things—playing any club and handing out CDs. I just wanted to get out and play music, every place I could. It all came together a few years later when I signed with Warner Bros. All the hard work paid off."

BECOMING THE HUNTED

"Sam [Hunt] is a buddy of mine and one of the nicest guys around. He was nice enough to let me jump on the back end of his Lipstick Graffiti Tour to play some shows. It worked out great. It's going to be a lot of work, but it's not work when you love what you do. It's going to be so much fun. It's everything that I've dreamed about."

GRANDFATHERLY ADVICE

"My grandfather always said, 'Be careful of the feet you step on climbing up because they might be connected to the ass you have to kiss on your way down.' Treat people right, that's the main thing."

MORE HORSEPOWER

A THOUSAND HORSES IS READY TO KICK IT INTO GEAR.

The concept of horsepower was developed in the 18th century to compare the output of steam engines to draft horses, but it seems a befitting metaphor for A Thousand Horses, a band that uses the building blocks of country, rock and blues to unleash lethal ballads and jammed-up anthems à la their Southern rock predecessors. Lynyrd Skynyrd had horsepower. Marshall Tucker Band? No doubt. The Black Crowes? Damn right.

Southern rock has always been about horsepower, and the pedal is down in 2015. You don't have to look much farther than a couple of Billboard charts for the burnt rubber. During the last week of February, Southern rockers Blackberry Smoke had the No. 1 country album, while A Thousand Horses' debut single, "Smoke," was cruising up the chart at No. 19. In fact, "Smoke" set a record for the highest debut by a new act when it opened at No. 28 on the Country Aircheck radio chart.

That's a lot for A Thousand Horses' four founding fathers—Michael Hobby (lead vocals), Bill Satcher (lead guitar), Zach Brown (guitar and vocals) and Graham DeLoach (bass and vocals)—to take in at the moment, while they refuel on assorted cocktails at the Tavern, a sleek gastropub in midtown Nashville. They use words like "crazy" and "unbelievable" to describe the success of "Smoke," a fresh take on an old vice—a toxic woman—that Michael co-wrote.

"It's insane," says Graham. "I pinch myself a lot. It hasn't even registered to us yet."

"Yeah, people keep saying, 'It's not supposed to happen like this,'" adds Bill. "We just want to get out

OPRY OPPORTUNITY

A Thousand Horses made their Grand Ole Opry debut on Feb. 24, playing two songs—"Smoke" and "Sunday Morning"—from their upcoming album, Southernality, which drops on June 9.

"It was awesome," says frontman Michael Hobby. "I checked it off my bucket list. I can't wait to go back. You can feel the energy when you step on that circle. Everyone who's come before you and everyone who will come after you, the history of it is amazing. It's my favorite show we've ever played, and we only played two songs."

there and play it for people."

Newberry, S.C., buddies Michael and Bill began building the base of the band when they packed their bags and headed to Nashville in 2005. Bill's cousin Graham joined them a year later, while Zach completed the core in 2010 after meeting the guys through a friend of a friend. They didn't have a name when they united, so they adopted the moniker of one of the first songs they wrote, and they've been gaining steam ever since. In keeping with the bigger-is-always-better theme of Southern rock, the guys increased their horsepower by adding more Horses, including three female backup singers, a fiddler and a keyboardist. That's a lot of people to pack onstage, or into a tour bus for that matter.

"Our bus is definitely a rolling party," says Michael, as we reconvene at a Music Row office three weeks after having drinks at the Tavern. "It's a 300-square-foot apartment with 12 people in it." It's even more crowded when you realize that bassist Graham is 6 feet 3 inches tall, while frontman Michael is a towering 6 feet 4 inches and generally sports a Wyatt Earp-esque cowboy hat that cuts an imposing presence onstage.

Regardless of the cramped quarters, when you get all those Horses under the roof, they power down the road, which is exactly what they'll be doing in May when they open for Darius Rucker on his Southern Style Tour.

"This is our first big, legit summer tour," says Michael. "We are totally pumped to get this thing kicked off on May 14."

"Yeah, right now we are putting together our party box [see sidebar] for the road," adds Zach with a laugh. "You know, all the stuff we'll need out there."

One thing that is definitely in the party box is a sound system, because A Thousand Horses wants to be able to blast their new album, Southernality, which will be released June 9. The 13-track offering, which was produced by Dave Cobb (Jason Isbell, Sturgill Simpson), has the muscle to lay the hammer down on songs like ground-shaker "Landslide" or moon-howler "Trailer Trashed." But the guys also know when to downshift, like on the addictive lead single, "Smoke," or the virtuous "Sunday Morning," which they co-wrote with Rich Robinson of The Black Crowes.

"It's essentially five years of songs," says Bill. "'Landslide' was written four or five years ago. 'Smoke' was the last song written for the album. Two days before we went in to record, Michael showed up with this song and we were like, 'Wow. That's going on the album.'"

"Southernality is our journey," echoes Michael. "We've been writing and playing those songs for the last five years. It's our journey since forming."

From the sound of things, A Thousand Horses' journey is only beginning. Fans can pre-order Southernality on iTunes and download four songs instantly, including "Smoke." But the best way to preview the album is by catching the band live. There is no shortage of horsepower. CW

Thinking Inside the Box

When the guys from A Thousand Horses got the call to join Darius Rucker's Southern Style Tour on May 14, they immediately began to construct their "party box," a collection of festive necessities for those days on the road.

"Right now, we've got a bunch of yard games like corn hole and ladder golf," says guitarist Zach Brown. "But we've also got a stereo system, grill, tailgate chairs, canopy, cooler. It's gonna be a big-ass box. It's a work in progress."

As Tears Go By

SUNNY SWEENEY and WILL HOGE get emotional on the video shoot for “My Bed.”

THE CONCEPT COULDN'T BE simpler: A man and a woman, an ardor cooled to flickering embers. And as the centerpiece in this tableau, the bed—once an altar to their passion and now a measure of the distance between them.

That's heavy stuff, but that's not why Sunny Sweeney is shedding tears between takes on her video shoot for the song “My Bed,” from her most recent album, Provoked. It's because the director of the shoot, Michael Poncé, has asked, “OK, Sunny, wanna do some tears?”

The artist is perched on a corner of the bed inside Elite Multimedia, a production company in Nashville. A camera stands on a tripod, maybe a foot away from her face. Lights illuminate Sunny, the metaphorical furniture and a bustling video crew within this vast, otherwise darkened room.

She thinks for a second and then replies, “I think so.”

Hair and makeup specialist Neil Rabinson steps up and brushes a bit of Mehron Sweat & Tears, a glycerin compound, beneath Sunny's left eye. “This will be ready to go immediately,” he advises the director, and in fact, a trickle is already glistening on her cheek.

“It's, like, slimy,” Sunny observes.

Michael is now setting up the next shot, in which duet partner Will Hoge, seated on the far side of the bed, is supposed to stand and walk out of the frame at the end of the song, with Sunny turning mournfully toward him on the lyric Baby, where did we go wrong?

But the director, jumbling his words, says, “Sunny, don't forget to turn the baby.” Sunny, Will and the crew laugh, relax and then, moments later as cameras roll, the tears fall and the solemnity of the moment is achieved.

A few minutes later, during a break in the action, Sunny reflects on the very personal meaning of the song. “I would never wish divorce on even my worst enemy. . . . No, I would wish it on her,” she corrects herself, with a sly grin.

“But aside from her, I would not wish it on anybody. It is the worst thing you can ever go through, in my opinion. I will always have some pain from that, even though I'm happily married and have moved on. But I can always go back to that—and I do, on songs like this. The pain stays with you. And that does guide my performance.”

The director helps create tension for the “My Bed” video by putting Sunny and Will on opposite sides.

When she wrote “My Bed” with Ashley Monroe and Angaleena Presley, Sunny wasn’t thinking of it as the duet it would eventually become. “We wrote it for just one person,” she explains. “I actually performed it in my shows for years. I’ve wanted to record it for a long time. Though he doesn’t want to take credit for it, it was my manager Steve Emley’s idea to make it a duet. And then he tossed out Will Hoge’s name and I was like, ‘Yes! That’s definitely going to be it.’”

For Will, the opportunity to record this song with Sunny was irresistible. “Sunny had been out on tour with me and my band,” he recalls. “We had gotten to spend some time together, so there was already some trust in our relationship, which makes it a whole lot easier to sing a song with someone.”

“But also, the minute I heard this song, I knew it would give me a chance to sing in a way that I don’t get to do as often as I’d like to,” he continues. “It just reminded me of those classic George Jones and Tammy Wynette heartbreak country ballads that I love. That’s not something we always get to do. And also, at the end of the day, this is on a Sunny Sweeney record. I’m not feeling like I have to carry the weight and focus the song.”

“I feel actually the same way,” Sunny adds. “It takes some pressure off of me to have somebody else. Like Will said, we’ve played shows together and we’re friends outside of this, so even though he’s saying he feels like a sideman, I feel like a sideman, too. I’ve done harmonies on albums but never a full-on duet, where he’s just as important to the song as I am.”

Their roles in the video are pretty much equal, too, a concept that was cooked up by the director and Sunny’s management. But the director is more than open to input from both performers. Throughout the morning, he moves them like chess pieces: first Sunny closer to the camera and Will in the background. They switch when Will sings his lines. Different endings are shot, with each artist walking out of the picture on the last line. Then Sunny comes up with a question.

“Is there any necessity of shooting the empty bed?” she asks.

Michael considers the idea and then responds, “We could do that.”

With that, crew members move it to set up a different camera angle. Production assistant Lindsey Daniel fusses over the covers and blankets, sculpting the perfect “sad bed” look.

“It’s pretty loose,” Sunny says afterward, reflecting on the day of filming. “It’s pretty chill, which is a great feeling.”

Then, with a trace of glycerin tears still on her cheek, she laughs. “I’m having a really good day today.”

When we came up with the idea to let YOU—the readers—decide which one of the 16 hottest stars in country music had the best “season” in a winner-takes-all tournament, we took our staff’s opinions out of the equation. After coming up with a list of factors that governed the seeding, our job was done. It was time to sit back and let you vote. And vote you did. For the last month, thousands of votes poured in each round until we were left with one woman standing: Carrie Underwood.

And what a spectacular season it’s been for Carrie. Not only did she drop her fifth consecutive Billboard No. 1 album, win a Grammy and earn an ACM Special Achievement Award, but she also developed her own clothing line and welcomed her first child into the world, a baby boy named Isaiah.

While other artists like Miranda Lambert, Luke Bryan and Blake Shelton certainly had unbelievable seasons, it’s hard to argue against Carrie’s remarkable run.

In fact, when it came down to head-to-head matchups, Carrie left little doubt who the victor would be. Carrie conquered Keith Urban in the opening round, blasted Blake Shelton in the quarterfinals, routed Miranda Lambert in the semifinals and crushed Kenny Chesney in the finals. That’s a who’s who of country powerhouses who all served as mere cannon fodder for Carrie on her Sherman-like march through the tourney. And the best part is that the tournament was all done in good fun with your help.

We’re already looking forward to another great tourney next year. Can Carrie repeat her championship run and start her own dynasty or will a new titleholder emerge? The new season begins now, and we’ll be watching.

Plot: As if the desert wasn't already hot enough, Mrs. Shelton shows up in a shiny Airstream with a pup by her side at a roadside hotel, looking as hot as an Alberto Vargas pinup girl for a few cheeky setups and some harmless flirtation with the pool boy.

Sam Hunt

Video: "Take Your Time"

Plot: Dark, gritty and, sadly, too true, Sam Hunt shows that not every knight in shining armor is surrounded by opulence as he rescues an offbeat damsel in distress from an abusive loser.

Reba McEntire

Video: "Going Out Like That"

Director: TK McKamy

Jake Owen

Video: "What We Ain't Got"

Director: Mason Dixon

Plot: Stark and haunting, images of Jake sitting on a stool are interspersed with riveting images of individuals each bearing their own pain and burden, including a small boy with a folded flag. And the emotion builds as the clip unfolds. One of the most compelling videos in country music.

The first country music video to air on MTV?

Cole Swindell

Video: "Ain't Worth the Whiskey"

Plot: Props to Michael Monaco and Cole for not taking the easy way out by following the story line verbatim. The breakup in this song almost takes a supporting role as the celebration of a buddy returning home from military service becomes the star. Raise your glasses, y'all!

More Mr. Nice Guy

If you put together a list of the nicest people in country music, Darius Rucker's name would definitely be on the short list. His laugh and joy for life are infectious. I can honestly say I don't think I've ever seen Darius when he doesn't act like it's a sunny, blue-skied day. His happiness carries over from his music to his love of sports.

Darius once told me he had one room with nine televisions in it. Nine. Why would you need that? According to Darius, it's so you don't have to miss any of the games. He's got the NBA package . . . the NHL package . . . all of it.

When I recently asked him if he still had all the televisions, I was surprised when he said no. Only one. The hitch is that it's one television that's the size of an entire wall. "We can simultaneously play eight different games," Rucker says. "And I guess I've become accustomed to it because I had a friend over, and after about 15 minutes, he was in the bathroom sick from all the motion."

Who in country music does Darius most closely follow the games with? "Oh, me and Dallas. Dallas Davidson and Luke [Bryan]," he says. "We text each other on Saturday with our picks." And fantasy football? "Absolutely. I've got five leagues and I'm the commissioner of every league. I even won the Nashville league this year." So what do you win? Darius told me, "I've got this guy that does all the belts for the WWE and he's made me a real wrestling belt that we pass around." And then with a sly grin he adds, "And money! The belt's cool, but the money's cooler."

If you could bet on the success of music, Darius would be one of the best bets you could make. "Homegrown Honey" is just the latest in a long string of his hits that have dominated the country charts. And though he first established himself with Hootie & the Blowfish, he has definitely become an established name in the realm of country music, too.

"My whole goal was just to get to make another record," Darius admits on a recent visit to America's Morning Show. "And it's been so much fun getting to be a part of the Nashville community. It's awesome." With four country albums now under his belt, plus an induction into the Grand Ole Opry, it's safe to say that Darius Rucker is without a doubt a bona fide country artist.

As for where his music is going next, Darius' fourth country album, Southern Style, will be released on March 31. I was lucky enough to get an advanced listen, and I knew from the moment I heard it I would be buying it for myself. The man can flat-out sing. Make sure to check out the title track and "Need You More," which are two of my favorites.

And if you need an extra shot of Darius, he's heading out in May on his Southern Style Tour with Brett Eldredge, Brothers Osborne and A Thousand Horses.

Blair Garner, a member of the National Radio Hall of Fame, is host of the NASH-FM nationally syndicated America's Morning Show.

WHAT'S THE SECRET BEHIND GARY ALLAN'S LONGEVITY? STAYING TRUE TO HIMSELF.

Gary Allan, like Shakespeare's Cassius, still bears that "lean and hungry look" at age 47. Sporting a jeans-casual outfit adorned with a ball cap, Gary appears very much in fighting shape as he takes a seat inside a Nashville sound studio. He's excited to be coming out swinging with a new and acclaimed single, "Hangover Tonight," and upcoming album, along with plenty of touring for the rest of the year.

It may seem hard to entirely fathom, but Gary's on the verge of celebrating 20 years in the most difficult of trades: the music business. The raspy-voiced singer out of California made his debut in the summer of 1996 with "Her Man," which gave listeners a first glimpse into his soulful, and certainly sensual, sides. And though industry awards and statuettes haven't filled up his mantel, Gary has succeeded in two of the most important areas—loyal fan base and longevity. The latter has remained his goal ever since he embarked on this unpredictable career two decades ago.

GARY ALLAN CONTINUED

"In my eyes, success is longevity," says Gary, in a reflective tone. "When people asked me back when I started, 'What do you want?' I would always say longevity, and that's still the same. I'd like to be that Willie Nelson type of guy who just keeps on going." With a wraparound grin, Gary pokes a little fun at himself, adding, "You know, 20 years from now, I want people saying, 'How is that guy still here?' That wouldn't bother me. That's what I still want—to be writing and recording relevant songs and still have your hat in the game."

Gary's latest offering, "Hangover Tonight," is one of those wheelhouse songs perfectly matched for Gary's style. The melody sways to a Motown-esque groove combined with a touch of Philly soul, delivered with Gary's blues-tinged rasp and sexy swagger.

And to his point of staying relevant, Gary wrote the tune with three relatively younger artists, Chris Stapleton, Jesse Frasure and Cary Barlowe. The single is the lead track from Gary's next album, due later this year.

"I just really felt like we needed something fresh [for the album]," Gary explains. "We had finished most of the record and I didn't feel like we had that." Gary had admired an earlier song that Chris and Jesse had written, one that he thought he had wrapped up in the bag. But not to be.

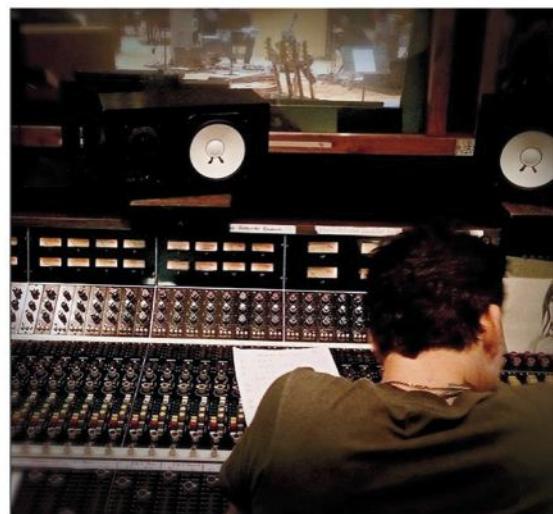

"Chris and Jesse had written this kind of Motown thing and I thought

I had it for my record," Gary begins. "But then, I didn't have it. My manager said why don't I try to write something with those two in that vein." Gary got together with Chris and Jesse, bringing Cary on board, and the result accomplished the musical mission. "This was actually the last song we wrote for the album," Gary says. "It's exactly what we were going for. Chris and Jesse and I ended up writing two others and both of those made the record."

Throughout his career, Gary has never been one to avoid taking new steps. He's pushed himself vocally at times with cuts like the emotional "Best I Ever Had," a cover of the Vertical Horizon hit, and "Life Ain't Always Beautiful," a wrenching number if one ever existed. For his 2013 album, Set You Free, Gary collaborated for the first time with female writers, including Hillary Lindsey on the No. 1 single "Every Storm (Runs Out of Rain)" and Sarah Buxton on "Pieces." He's open to fresh experiences, perhaps one more reason why he has stayed not only active but also relevant at the same time. Teaming up with the three writers on "Hangover Tonight" proved one more example of his willingness to be flexible, even when the processes aren't the same.

"It was very different writing with Chris and them," Gary acknowledges with a smile. "I remember Chris being a really fast writer. Chris had written a lot with Jesse, who is a DJ, and that was different itself. Jesse had speakers set up facing me and he had a little laptop with the beats and the chord progressions and the instruments on there. We basically put melodies over what he did. Which was very odd—I had never written like that. I mean, I still write in notebooks," he adds with a generous poke at himself. "In fact, we were all laughing about how much country music has changed as we were writing. They all came in with their computers and I walk in the studio with my notebooks and they're all kind of laughing at me."

Gary describes it all in good-natured fashion, even fessing up to one more nod to the old-school method. "I always have songs and ideas written down," he says, "and I also put things on cassettes. It's easier for me to jot down ideas. I've lost so many songs to computers."

But other than his nonreliance on technology, Gary is good with change. It comes from within, he will gladly confide. "First off, it's me trying to push myself to do something different," Gary says. "With this new single, I almost feel like I did when I had [the 1999 single] 'Smoke Rings in the Dark.' I got something that is so different that it's either going to screw up my career," he smiles, "or help it."

Surely, "Hangover Tonight" works in well with today's brand of country, where the spaces are more wide open than ever before. Listen to the majority of tunes that get whopping amounts of airtime and you'll hear an infusion of sounds from outside the traditional boundaries of country.

"This is the most I've ever seen country music change," Gary muses as he sits back in his chair. "You have to look at it and say, 'How am I going to fit into this?' Especially now, with all the rapping and stuff like that. But when I heard this song, I thought I could get all over that. I've always got it in me to try something that I haven't heard or done before. I think the opposite of that is you find yourself on the jaded side of the fence, and there's no money on the jaded side."

When not in the studio or on the stage, Gary tends to a thriving business, the hip clothing store he opened a few years ago in Nashville, The Label. The shop, located in the trendy neighborhood known as 12South, features an array of clothes and jewelry for both men and women. Gary's fellow artists drop in often to buy that special, eye-catching garment for red carpets and awards show appearances. "We have a lot of tourists who also come through," Gary says. "But mainly, any band that comes to town will come and see us."

The Label has actually evolved into a family business. Gary's daughters, Maggie, Dallas and Tanna, all play a big part in the day-to-day operation. "My oldest daughter does the books and a lot of the buying," says the proud dad. "My youngest girl is still in college, but she comes in when she can. It's always fun to watch the awards shows with them because they'll see an artist and go, 'I helped dress him,' or something like that."

Gary's middle daughter, Dallas, once held aspirations of a singing career, and even performed with her dad during his 2009 show in Nashville at the Ryman Auditorium. The two harmonized on The Band's classic "The Night They Drove Old Dixie Down," earning a crescendo of applause from the audience. But neither she nor her sisters show any sort of interest in following their dad down the entertainment trail.

"They all still like to play and

New Fave

Fans aren't the only folks raving over singer/songwriter CHRIS STAPLETON. Gary Allan, who collaborated with Chris on three songs from his upcoming new album, has also been captivated by Chris' writing and achingly soulful voice that can leap from Otis Redding to Screamin' Jay Hawkins in a heartbeat. Chris co-wrote Gary's current single, "Hangover Tonight."

"He has become one of my favorite singers," Gary, a soul-tinged vocalist himself, says. "All of the background vocals on 'Hangover Tonight' are his. When Chris layers his voice like that, it sounds like 15 black women from a choir. We've got him all over the record."

sing but none of them want to do this for a living," Gary says, gesturing toward his guitar case. "And I think it was because I was gone so much. In conversations with them, their take on it was that success means you'll never see your family. And I said that's true. But you have to decide what you want."

He received a similar slice of advice from the legendary Buck Owens, one of Gary's musical heroes. "Buck told me one time that you're going to have to make sacrifices if you want this career," Gary recalls. "One of the sacrifices is being gone all the time."

Now that his three daughters are grown, Gary has more time to put in additional (and guilt-free) road dates. The schedule for the year is packed with concert and festival dates, but there's a new wrinkle he'd love to add. "What I want to do this year are more acoustic shows," Gary explains. "I'd like to do some by myself or maybe just me and one or two other guys and just strip it all down."

He's performed such shows at Nashville club The Listening Room Cafe as well as for a recent benefit, Stars for Wishes. Fans, always Gary's prime consideration, embrace the intimate, more personal shows. "I have so much fun doing them and I always think, 'Man, we have to do more of these.' It's great to be able to do some album cuts and things like that," Gary says. "Anytime it's a charity, it's always an acoustic thing. But one day, I'd like to do a whole tour of just that. It's always fun to watch people play when they're in a stripped-down setting," he adds, smiling wryly. "You can tell the ones who are being carried."

No such concerns for Gary, who's been carrying the load in workman-like fashion since the 1990s. He knows that he's already beaten the odds many times over. To the question "Are you a survivor?" Gary answers in the affirmative.

"I do look back on my career and say I've survived," he reflects, mat-

"I do
look back on my career
and say
survived."

ter-of-factly. "And I love the way I did it. I think I always did things the way I wanted to and even bucked convention sometimes. I wouldn't change one thing."

He looks around the sound room and breaks into a slight grin. "You know, I always said I wanted to be here for 20 years," he notes. "Now, I'm going to have to start saying 30." CW

THREE OF A

KIND

Rascal Flatts takes on Las Vegas and lives to tell about it.

STORY BY MELINDA NEWMAN

RASCAL FLATTS RECENTLY completed a nine-date residency at The Joint at the Hard Rock Hotel and Casino in Las Vegas, but the trio hopes the run served as the initial courtship leading up to a committed relationship.

"We'd certainly love to be out here more and they're very interested in having us," said bassist Jay DeMarcus, sitting in the balcony of the 4,200-capacity theater hours before the band's first show on Feb. 25. "We just need to date each other for a while before we get married. That's what we're out here doing."

Las Vegas greeted the band with open arms, welcoming them shortly before their opening-night concert with a serenade from the 40-piece Foothill High School marching band, which played "Fast Cars and Freedom" and "Life Is a Highway" as the three members made a grand entrance in NASCAR race cars.

"We're thrilled to death to be the first country residency at The Joint," said lead singer Gary LeVox. "I think it will open the doors for some other country acts to come in and take up residency, a great thing for our format and our genre of music." Though several country solo artists, including Garth Brooks, Shania Twain, and Tim McGraw and Faith Hill, have enjoyed residencies in Las Vegas, Rascal Flatts was the first country group to do so.

"It was perfect timing," said guitarist Joe Don Rooney. "We had this time off and our managers called us at the end of last summer and said, 'Is this something you think you want to do?' We were like, 'That's perfect!' It's nice to leave everything set up. We have the hotel rooms for three weeks."

During the run, which ended March 14, the band embraced Sin City: Gary and Rascal Flatts' opening act, The Voice champ Craig Wayne Boyd, served as celebrity shavers at the Hard Rock's St. Baldrick's Foundation's cancer charity fundraiser on March 7, and Rascal Flatts sang the national anthem at the Kobalt 400 NASCAR Sprint Cup Series race at Las Vegas Motor Speedway on March 8.

The Las Vegas stint gave the band the chance to break in two new band members—"We just thought it was time to bring something different to the table," Gary said—as well as reimagine some of their big hits in a new light.

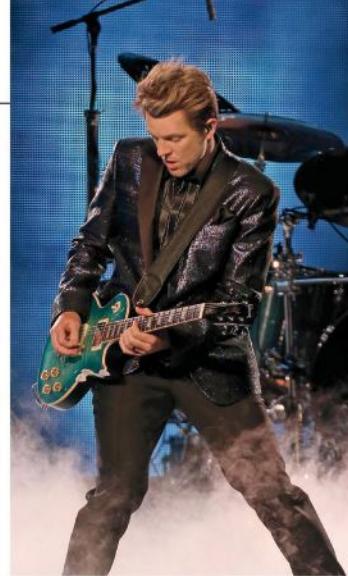

The highlight of the shows came when the trio, surrounded by their band, formed a semicircle to perform "Mayberry," "I'm Movin'

Rascal Flatts made their Las Vegas entrance in style: riding to the Hard Rock in NASCAR race cars and backed by a marching band.

On" and "Prayin' for Daylight" in stripped-down, largely acoustic arrangements, with "Prayin'" recast as a bluegrass tune. "The concept was to bring a little bit of Nashville to Vegas," Jay said. "[The residency] gave us the freedom to be creative with our music and present some songs in different ways."

The concert packed in 20 hits in less than 90 minutes. "You want to hit them with the ones they want to hear," Joe Don said. "There's always a couple extra that might get thrown in or thrown out, but, hopefully at the end of the day, [the fans] are happy with what they heard and the way it was presented."

The only downside? For Gary—or any vocalist—arid Las Vegas "is the worst place on the planet for a singer to be," he said. "You just pray. You just try to stay hydrated. Try to sleep as much as you can, and less talking as you can."

The Las Vegas dates coincided with Rascal Flatts celebrating the 15th anniversary of debut single "Prayin' for Daylight." Since then, the band has sold nearly 23 million albums and scored 15 No. 1 hits. But there's a lingering misperception that Jay said the band sometimes still faces. "If people knew us really well, they would know how passionate we are about country music and what a deep love we have for it," he said. "When we first came out, we had trendy clothes, I think I had some earrings when we first came out, but we were automatically derided as guys who ride the train of country music to be successful because we couldn't do it in pop music. We were easily dismissed that way, but the thing about it is we did country music because we're country music lovers. It's in our DNA."

And with 15 years of proving that they're country strong, Gary says he's looking forward to the next 15. "Who knows what God has in store for us? We love going to Europe, we love the States, but first and foremost, the next 15 years hopefully we're writing and recording the best stuff we've ever done and [continuing] on the journey of touching people's lives through music and telling their stories through song."

Rascal Flatts hits the road again in late May on Riot Tour 2015, with opening act Scotty McCreery, but before then, the band will compete for vocal group of the year at the 50th annual Academy of Country Music Awards in Arlington, Texas, on April 19. Rascal Flatts has won the award six times before, most recently in 2009. "We're so humbled to be back in the category," said Jay. "I think sometimes you can take certain things for granted in your career and we had gotten used to being nominated, and then all of a sudden it was gone. We have a greater appreciation for being back in [the category] and we feel even more grateful for it this time than maybe in some previous years." CW

KNOWING B

A cancer-free Wade Hayes makes every moment count.

STORY BY DEBORAH EVANS PRICE

BETTER

The best country songs come from real-life experiences, and few have a more compelling back story than the title track of Wade Hayes' new album, Go Live Your Life.

"It's actually a true story," Wade says. "When I'd gotten through cancer the second time, and we were looking at my blood work, my oncologist was talking about taking my port out. A port is something they implant into either your chest or under your arm where you receive chemotherapy. My oncologist said, 'Wade, you were stage IV and now you're cancer-free. We can take your port out. This is a big deal and I want to tell you something. I want you to go live your life.'" Wade took those words to heart and threw himself back into his passions—working on old trucks, playing with his dog, Jack, and of course, making country music.

Seated in a downtown Nashville restaurant, wearing jeans and a casual gray shirt, Wade looks healthy and fit. Tall and broad-shouldered, he's packed some weight back on his 6-foot-2 frame. It's hard to imagine that at one point he had only a 12 percent chance of surviving.

Wade was first diagnosed with stage IV colon cancer in October 2011, and after surgery and chemotherapy, it looked like he had beat it. Then came the devastating news in fall 2012 that it was back. "It came back in my lymph nodes, near the original cancer site," he says. "I had to take chemo for several months prior to surgery, and then they did surgery again, opened me up nearly in the exact same spot, and got all the lymph nodes out that were affected. I've been cancer-free since."

Wade will never forget when the oncologist pronounced him cancer-free the second time.

"Go Live Your Life"

It's a chilly afternoon in Lebanon, Tenn., a little east of Nashville, and Wade's dog, Jack, is happily sitting alongside his owner in the front seat of Wade's 1973 Ford truck as he shoots a video for his new single, "Go Live Your Life." Suddenly a drone dips down from the sky and hovers near the windshield. Jack goes nuts. He doesn't mind starring in a country music video, but the drone is a bit too much for the energetic pet.

"I'd never seen a drone in person," Wade says, crediting director Korby Lenker with the idea to use one to film his video. "It was incredible. It was the most fascinating machine I've seen in years. I loved it. But Jack, my dog, about lost his mind."

The drone hovers above the truck filming while Wade drives through the countryside. "One of the things the song is about is finding the things in life that make you happy, taking time for them, reaching for those things, and just not taking them for granted," Wade explains. "One of the few things in this life that actually does make me happy is riding around out in the country in that old truck. So that was a big part of the video for my personal satisfaction."

Cutting-edge drone camera technology helped Wade and director Korby Lenker make the video for "Go Live Your Life," but Wade's dog, Jack, was not a fan of the flying contraption while they were filming in the truck.

When he's not showing off his guitar licks on the stage, Wade spends much of his time speaking at events for cancer-related causes, like the Undy 5000 race.

WADE HAYES CONTINUED

"It hit me like a ton of bricks," he says, "because I knew that he meant two different things: One being, it's kind of a miracle that you're still here. You need to go enjoy your life. And two being, you had cancer really bad, and when it spread as far as it did, there's a good chance that it can come back. He was telling me to go live my life, because we don't know how long this good is going to be. I told Bobby Pinson that story and we wrote the song."

"Go Live Your Life" anchors an album that mixes up-tempo tunes such as "Remember the Alimony" and poignant ballads like "If the Sun Comes Up." After everything Wade has been through, no one could blame the Oklahoma native for crafting a heavy collection of songs on the fragility of life, but that's not what he delivers. The new album—his first since 2009's Place to Turn Around—is the perfect balance of meaty, personal songs and playful, upbeat numbers. "Some of my favorite songs on this new project are just made-up stuff that's fun to play, fun stories," he says. "It's fun musically. Every song has its place. Not every song's going to be 'Bridge Over Troubled Water.' We need an 'Achy Breaky' in there somewhere."

Wade is also touring again, frequently teaming up for shows with Bryan White and Mark Wills. "I'm enjoying it more now than I ever have," he says of performing. "I do feel a lot more comfortable and I think the whole deal with getting sick has changed me immensely. It's as if I'm looking through different eyeballs now. I notice things like the night sky, the stars. I'm fascinated with them now. Every night that it's clear, I go out and look."

When asked why he survived in the face of incredible odds, Wade turns spiritual. "I know why I'm still here. Not to take anything from the medical people because they're brilliant, but God has made it clear to me that He's the reason I'm still here," he says. "I know that I still have something to do here and I'm trying my best. I've been spared to, hopefully, help somebody else who's been diagnosed, or help somebody not go through this in the first place, to get them screened early enough. I feel like that's the reason. It's not because [I'm] a good person, because I'm not. I'm a regular guy. I'm just like everyone else." CW

ALBUMS

DARIUS RUCKERSouthern Style*

CAPITOL NASHVILLE

GRADE: B+

Happy. No, not the megahit from recognizably hatted Pharrell Williams. It's the unspoken theme of Darius Rucker's newest album, Southern Style.

Like the debut single, "Home-grown Honey," the vast majority of the album, 12 out of 13 songs, is happy, positive and mid-to-up-tempo. And there's nothing not to like about that. Darius, his longtime friend and producer Frank Rogers and his fellow songwriters have created a listenable project that is so full of love, fun and sweet memories, you can practically see the smile on Darius' lips as he sings tunes like the rolling "Low Country" or the snappy "You, Me and My Guitar." With this, his fourth country album, Darius and his team have most definitely solidified his sound with expertly layered, but not overdone, musical arrangements that add some dimension to his already warmly textured vocals.

Although heavy on chugga-chugga shuffle beats, Southern Style builds nicely to "You Can Have Charleston," the sole, beautifully written heart-breaker on the project. But it might be the presumed autobiographical final track, "So I Sang," that tugs the heartstrings the most and reminds us why he has become such a respected solo artist in country music.

KRISTIAN BUSH

Southern Gravity

STREAMSOUND RECORDS

GRADE: B+

Kristian steps out of the Sugarland shadow and crafts a highly personal, groove-oriented effort that one could rightly call the “feel-good” album of the year. Which might lead you to believe that it’s some airy bit of nonsense with no more substance than cotton candy. But not so. The lyrics throughout have a highly descriptive, reflective quality, in particular the sweetly romantic “Sending You a Sunset” and the soothing closer, “House on a Beach.” Kristian taps into his love of all things musical, with his reggae influences shining through on the hit “Trailer Hitch,” a nice piece of philosophy about giving back. The title track is yet another ode to the South, but this comes with less pandering and more wistfully stated feeling, a luxurious outing that makes you feel like a character in a Eudora Welty novel. The Tom Petty-ish “Make Another Memory,” which kicks off the album, stands as a likely future single candidate. In all, only “Light Me Up” and “Waiting On an Angel” (the title tells you all you need to know) miss the mark. But overall, you’ll be drawn to the good and positive vibes, delivered with Kristian’s laid-back but soulful style, unbelievably catchy melodies and warm sentiments. — BOB PAXMAN

RANDY ROGERS & WADE BOWEN

Hold My Beer, Vol. 1

LILBUDDY TOONS

GRADE: A

Randy Rogers and Wade Bowen have been chewing up the same Texas caliche since the early 2000s, so it seems only natural the BFFs trade licks on their new duet album, Hold My Beer, Vol. 1, which drops on April 20. The album, produced by Lloyd Maines (Dixie Chicks, Robert Earl Keen), is a studio extension of their Hold My Beer and Watch This Tour, a fun-loving, scaled-back jaunt the boys have been partaking in for the last eight years. Basically, Randy and Wade were bros before bro-country neutered country radio, and their new album is the perfect microcosm of everything that’s good about friends collaborating, from the cover of Willie and Merle’s “Reasons to Quit” to the happy-go-lucky “Lady Bug” and honky-tonker “Good Luck With That,” which are two of the seven originals on the record. The 10-song offering is a Texas-sized foot-stomper—full of fiddle and steel, frivolity and standards (pun intended regarding track six, “I’ve Got Standards”)—from two guys who give a good name to bro-mance. — JIM CASEY

WILLIAM ELLIOTT WHITMORE

FOR FANS OF:

Bob Dylan, Johnny Cash,
Tom Waits

ESSENTIAL LISTENING:

- "Civilizations"
- "Healing to Do"
- "Trouble in Your Heart"
- "Don't Strike Me Down"

A LITTLE CHANGE CAN be a good thing, particularly when it comes to recording music. Singer-songwriter William Elliott Whitmore was certainly open to the idea with his new album, Radium Death, which offers a few electrified, full-band arrangements in addition to the stark, acoustic banjo or guitar folk songs that have long been his stock and trade.

"We always say, this record'll be around long after I'm dead, so do what's best for the music," says William, who recorded Radium Death with his cousin Luke Tweedy. "It's easy to stick to conventions and think, well, gosh, I've never done organ, [but] you have to be open to new things."

But William, who still lives on the farm in Iowa where he grew up, retains the voice that helped launch his career, a weathered instrument that sounds as old as time itself. Not content to be merely a nostalgia act singing Lead Belly tunes, however, William injects his songs like "Civilizations" and

"Healing to Do" with a punkish intensity that stands out from his quieter peers.

"I always felt like punk and blues and country, it's based in the same sort of attitude," explains William, who grew up with his family's country music before falling in with the DIY punk scene in Iowa City. "That's not a new realization. It's different sides of the same coin—using a few chords to put forth an idea."

William originally cut his teeth playing basements and house parties with punk bands, sticking out like a sore thumb with just his banjo and guitar. "I kind of came in through the side door of the music scene playing my banjo," he says, laughing. "I'd play these folk/country songs opening up for these hardcore bands that are just screaming, carrying on, so to stand out I had to get my presence known and it meant singing louder."

There's a nuanced sense of punk rock's politics in songs like "Ain't Gone Yet" and "Civilizations," where hardworking folks are just pawns caught in a global quest for destruction, where mountaintops and forests are just obstacles to get the goodies underneath. "I like the idea that empires rise, empires fall, and really just regular people are just trying to survive," he explains, "and we're just trying to figure out what's for supper."

And though Radium Death does have many quieter moments, like "Can't Go Back," William's songs have a knife-like edge that speaks to his punk background, an education that continues to inform the way he looks at his music today.

"Those punk rock ethics, I still carry with me: be courteous, just do your job and don't have a big ego," he says. "It's like working on the farm. Don't expect a pat on the back because you scooped out the horse stall. It's your job, just do it."

Plugged into an amp or not, that's a solid guiding principle for any musician.

— JON FREEMAN

FLASHBACK

THIS WEEK IN COUNTRY

They called themselves "The Outlaws," a determined group of artists—WILLIE NELSON, WAYLON JENNINGS, JESSI COLTER and TOMPAL GLASER—who rebelled against the Nashville way of making music. The maverick band wanted control over their own music, which songs they could perform and who would produce them. Their album Wanted! The Outlaws, released in February 1976, became their statement, with songs like "Good Hearted Woman" and "My Heroes Have Always Been Cowboys." By the end of February, it sat on top of the country albums chart. On March 30, 1976, the album earned a gold certification for sales of 500,000 copies, and it went on to become the first country album to receive platinum certification for 1 million copies.

Songwriter Dean Dillon may not have cared for his own composition, but GEORGE STRAIT latched onto "Ocean Front Property" and turned it into a No. 1 hit. Dean has often expressed the fact that he never liked the song, which he wrote with Hank Cochran and Royce Porter, because of its novelty angle. "It's just not the kind of song I like to write," Dean told Country Weekly. "I just don't write funny songs. I don't consider myself that kind of writer where you have to use humor." But he was surely smiling after seeing the results. George released the song in January 1987, and on April 4, "Ocean Front Property" became his 10th career No. 1 hit.
